Sažetak

Ova se doktorska disertacija temelji na rezultatima istraživanja obilježja i značenja triju Zajčevih jedinih nacionalnopovijesnih opera (Mislav, Ban Leget i Nikola Šubić Zrinjski). Temelj je rada muzikološka analiza partitura s obzirom na njihovo tekstnoglazbeno tkivo, a u središtu su istraživanja bile: glazbene sastavnice (ritamske, melodijske, harmonijske i formne), glazbena artikulacija dijelova / brojeva / prizora, analitička razradba libreta te sveza libreta i glazbenoga sadržaja (strukture opere), teatrološki pristup opernome djelu (u pogledu suodnosa dramskoga teksta, libreta i operne partiture, odnosno recepcije i percepcije djela u hrvatskoj /zagrebačkoj/ sredini toga doba), naposljetku, promisao o scenskoj (vizualnoj) komponenti operâ. Odgovarajućim metodološkim pristupom, što je uključivao arhivski rad na autografnim i ostalim rukopisnim te tiskanim izvorima, proučavanje historiografske građe, analitički rad te artikulaciju prikupljenih i odabranih podataka u znanstvenu cjelinu interdisciplinarnog karaktera, u ovome su radu izloženi različiti aspekti (o i oko) Zajčeve nacionalnopovijesne operne trilogije. Također se utvrdilo na koji je način i u kojoj mjeri, kao najkompetentniji i profesionalni glazbenik s prethodnim internacionalnim iskustvom, odgojen na talijanskoj glazbi („verdijanstvu“) i s praktičnim djelovanjem operetnoga majstora, ali i otvoren novim utjecajima sublimiranima u zahtjevima, očekivanjima te mogućnostima hrvatske sredine, Zajc odgovorio zadatku stvaranja hrvatskoga nacionalnoga opernoga repertoara. Osobita se pozornost posvetila sagledavanju elemenata nacionalnoga na razini: teksta / libreta, glazbene komponente, dramaturškoga aspekta (dramaturgije glazbe, dramaturgije libreta, dramaturgije scene, dakle, vizualne komponente u pogledu scenografije i kostimografije), ali i odnosu internacionalnoga / kozmpolitskoga i nacionalnoga idioma u Zajčevoj opernoj trilogiji. U kontekstu vremena i prostora (intencije sredine i intencije autorova stvaranja) i u odnosu na postojeću glazbenu tradiciju te perceptivna iskustva sredine za koju je stvarao, Zajc je progovorio u znatnoj mjeri aktualnim (primjerenim) glazbenim jezikom, a razinom uporabe glazbenofolklornih elemenata, odgovorio je i na ideološke poticaje toga povijesnoga trenutka. Stoga se potvrdila teza da je Zajc u drugoj polovici 19. stoljeća u začetnim godinama hrvatske Opere – unatoč i/ili zahvaljujući višeslojnim čimbenicima – ostvario bitan, ključan i tadašnjoj publici prepoznatljiv, zapravo dotad prvi realni hrvatski nacionalni operni kanon s dostatnim i, kao što se pokazalo, relevantnim obilježjima nacionalnoga idioma. Stoga je ovaj rad doprinos promišljanju o Zajčevoj ulozi u kreiranju prvoga nacionalnoga opernoga repertoara, ujedno i odgovor na pitanje o nacionalnim i internacionalnim elementima i interakciji tih obilježja te biva otvoren novim muzikološkim i kroatološkim, analitičkim i/ili sintetskim radovima o Zajcu i njegovu opusu.

Summary

Zajc's Croatian national opera trilogy Mislav (1870), Ban Leget (1872) and Nikola Šubić Zrinjski (1876) was composed in a sequence and by that time Zajc already had had compositional experience in operas, acquired in both his early and intensive operatic periods. After a series of operettas, composing of a historic opera with national elements was a conditio sine qua non, especially after Zajc's arrival in Zagreb from Vienna, which was arranged with Croatian intellectuals in 1870. That same year, the premiere of opera Mislav, which was on 2nd October, one decade after the establishment of the Croatian Drama (1860), i.e. Croatian National Theatre (1861) and twenty years after completion of, then still unperformed Lisinski's opera Porin (1847 – 1851) commenced the work of Zagreb's permanent opera as well as Zajc's forty years long musical activity in Zagreb. Moreover, the aforementioned operas, together with Lisinski's Love and Malice, were in Croatian cultural and historical range of that time declared as only “real” Croatian national operas which were composed and performed (except Porin, which was performed in 1897). Despite their uneven quality level and contemporary as well as later success (audience reception), our attention was attracted by the questions pertaining the competence of the author who had to make, upon arrival, all the necessary assumptions for creating the first publicly performed national opera. Firstly, the music ensemble and education were to be established; “upbringing” the players and music education of the singers. In accordance with inherited predispositions, cultural and family ambience (influence of his musician father), music education and specialization (Rijeka, Milan), author's artistic growth and formation in diverse environments (Rijeka, Milan, Vienna, Zagreb), Zajc managed to establish the creative dialogue in the new ambient, in the context of time and the intention of creation. One could say that the endeavours of Zagreb's patriots for the formation of national (musical) culture after the period of Bach's absolutism coincided with (private and artistic) circumstances which have brought Zajc in Zagreb. Zajc came in the time period between the neoabsolutism and the rule of Héderváry (from 1883). While the operas Mislav and Ban Leget were composed during the reigns of banus Levin Rauch (Mislav), rather Antun Vakanović (Ban Leget), both guided by aggressive Hungarian politics, the opera Nikola Šubić Zrinjski was created during the reign of Ivan Mažuranić, whose reign was a “bright oasis” in the socio-political circumstances in Croatia in the second half of 19th century. Even though the last period was rather favourable, one could say that the opera trilogy as whole was composed in the intermission between two strong political pressures (Bach's and Khuen's). Therefore, it is important to emphasise the convenience of the historical moment for the expression of the national, that is, for the creation of national operas with more or less allusive messages and metaphors, especially for plunging in the Croatian langsyne (which as such became evident in Zajc's trilogy). This can especially relate to Mislav, it being the first work of its kind, but also to Ban Leget and Nikola Šubić Zrinjski, which were also intended to be national operas, and Zajc followed mutual ideas (for instance, self-sacrifice) in his choice of themes in all three works, thus being pursuant to the general mood of the society of the time. Their mission was to reinvigorate and confirm the Croatian national identity in the times of uncertainty, just after the two Settlements, during the unrest in Croatian national aspirations. The choice of themes aimed, with a great deal of certainty, for the confirmation of the national: the existence of the nation since the "ancient history". Furthermore, the themes reflected the key terms of the founders' myths of identity, unity and continuity (of one's nation).

Librettos, three diverse texts written by three authors (Franjo Marković: Mislav; Ivan Dežman: Ban Leget; Hugo Badalić: Nikola Šubić Zrinjski), were inspired by folk tale (Good Children from Erben's collection no. 48 in Mislav), historic book (De regno Dalmatiae et Croatiae, written by Ivan Lucius in 1666 in Ban Leget) and a drama text (written by a German Theodor Körner after a drama Zriny from 1812 in opera Nikola Šubić Zrinjski) – three topics from three different sources: folk tale (Mislav), scenes from Croatian history / legends / myths (Ban Leget) and a historic event (Nikola Šubić Zrinjski). The subjects are typical for that time and they depict three different periods of Croatian history in range of 1000 years; 6th century in so called Great Croatia, homeland of Croatian people before the journey to Panonia and Adriatic sea (Mislav: battle with Avars); the second half of 10th century (Ban Leget: internal conflicts of a disunited nation – battle for power; an illegitimate ruler) and 16th century (Nikola Šubić Zrinjski: the conflict with the Turks).

The librettists of Zajc's national-historical trilogy were three distinguished writers, as well as librettists of Zajc's other operas (Josip Eugen Tomić, August Harambašić, Ivan Trnski, Stjepan Širola, Julije Benešić, S. S. Kranjčević). However, in the time of conception of those operas they were all young people; Ivan Dežman (31 years old) had had very little theatrical experience and Franjo Marković (25 years old) and Hugo Badalić (25 years old) hadn't had any experience in writing a libretto. So, in the conception of the dramatic course they didn't follow the scheme of Italian librettos, such as different dispositions of numbers / scenes which are conditioned by drama. However, despite the different quality levels and/or some minor shortcomings of librettos (Mislav, Ban Leget), mostly as illogicality in language and drama, the three librettists strived to "think musically" during writing their texts, making parts of diverse character and atmosphere possible, solos (romances and arias), vocal duets, quartets, quintets, sextets, choruses, marches (suggested by text) and other structural opera parts.

In this paper diverse aspects of Zajc's national historical trilogy are stated; on the one hand, about them it is contemplated regarding time and beginnings of creation Croatian national operatic repertoire, and on the other hand regarding their musical and textual characteristics based on musicological and croatological analysis.

Namely, thanks to the analytical and comparative method various factors are considered, not only by necessary basic analytics of an opera, but their relation (by emphasising the differences in diverse aspects as well as connecting similarities). According to presumptions which are the result of consulting the primary and secondary material and selection of relevant facts, and based on the three national historical operas as one segment of author's opus, the thought about the level of participation of a composer in musical courses of that time was affirmed. The research aimed to comprehend the level of composer's contribution and significance in the context of his oeuvre and inspect the question of author's intention of creation in the time and milieu in which he was engaged (the milieu intentions) from various aspects. Firstly, the cultural, socio-political and ideological surroundings were observed, especially the idea of the national as well as the thought of national in Zajc's works, along with the reception of the national historical trilogy in the time of its creation (chapter II). Particularly, some of the (new) cognitions led to conclusion that Zajc – according to his own saying – in fact had an rather early approach to the problematic of the national (which was once more the affirmation of his knowledge, capabilities and artistic crafts, but foremost his striving to bring it to reality) in the way and by the means he thought he should. However, even though he was unprepared for such national idiom and isolated from the milieu in which those phenomena would be closer to him, he had understood them in his own artistic way and had fulfilled the essential national task.

Based on available and collected material and using the proper methodological procedures, the score and text analysis were made (the original scores) of three operas and text sources (literary templates and librettos), the disposition / structure of musical material was observed, organization of parts of the opera (articulation of numbers/scenes, the course of action, the compositional praxis in shaping the course of action), furthermore, regarding the formal structure of opera numbers / scenes, the dramaturgical side of the opera was analysed, which manifested itself in the plan of bigger entreties (important solo and ensemble scenes, choruses and orchestral parts, etc.) and in procedures regarding work with the rhythm, melody and motives. On the one hand, the permeation of the scenes / acts in the way of transfusion of the parts in one logical whole or chaining, by joining contrast segments, the musical differentiation of some parts, musical characterisation of the characters, etc.; on the other hand by observing the relations: dramaturgy of the libretto – dramaturgy of the music – dramaturgy of the scenery; visualisation or visual / scenery moments in the operas, the psychological effects in musical content-wise shaping of the storyline. In the centre part of this dissertation (chapter III), most of the attention is dedicated to musical and not only textual component of the operas, which included Zajc's melodic / vocal thought in operatic material, the component regarding harmony and rhythm, one could say the numerous influences which formed the author's musical expression, which was influenced by not only Italian, but German operatic tradition (as seen in rhythmical elements and operatic gesture) and by adding the Slavic (Croatian) elements (achieved by diverse means and in diverse nuances). Lots of thought was given to the presence folk motives (tunes and rhythmic patterns) as well as texts with folk characteristics. Namely, according to discovered influences of the content motivic in operas and their appliance, remarkable indicators for the national idea in libretto were found (such as narration / fairy tale, historical topic / legend and an episode from the history), especially pertaining the national idioms in choruses, which had a significant role in national operas (they represented the people, the national idea and patriotic rhetoric as well as heroic element), and all that not only as textual messages, but compositional procedures (by adding motives and musical associations on the folk music tradition), and, last but not least, national ideas in the visual aspect of the piece (costumes, scenery, movement).

Furthermore, the score and libretto analysis, regarding the contemplation on national and international or about questions: what is the national in the music, text (theme) and the visual component of the operas, led us to the judgment of author's intention of creation as well as the intention of time, which imposed the task and also made the creation of the national repertoire possible.

Of course, we raised the question concerning the extent of influences which formed Zajc's compositional style. Summing them, we come to the thesis emphasized in the introduction of this paper. From the observances it is clear that Zajc especially in this isolated segment of his opus – in accordance with then contemporary circumstances and his own capacities – was unavoidably tied to the socio-political events in his (Zagreb's / Croatian) milieu, or he was defined by them, and their artistic realization was necessarily conditioned by existing literature and librettos. Meanwhile, in their valorization one should consider the whole context of their designation – the composer's artistic habitus and many factors. One could attribute Zajc with the phrase “being torn between”; there are three layers on three levels: first, his artistic profile between intimate creation, inclination and affinity, then the assignment, needs and capabilities of the milieu and the definition by the musical education and competence; the second, between the triple cultural influences of Italian, German and Croatian tradition, and third is, as the result of the second one, the aspect of author’s trilingualism as well as the environment (in which beside Croatian and German, and Italian and Croatian language in Dalmatia, even the Hungarian was present). Of course, in those triplenesses one could, as a metaphor, observe even the territorial designation of Triune Kingdom and her division between Croatian, Hungarian and Austrian politic.

Even though Zajc kept the basic language of international / cosmopolitan (Italian) music, in his national historical trilogy, wanting to create the national opera canon, he incorporated some formal innovations, as well as inventive melodic and rhythmic patterns. Zajc came to some of the solutions by himself, intuitively, which are already seen in Mislav, as an attempt to incorporate Slavic musical elements. That was achieved by:

- a) outer (descriptive, imitative) associations on folk melodies (by using folklore, oriental and local elements – the cadenzas in fifths, simple motives, repetitive patterns, dance rhythms and rhythmic patterns of Slavic and Czech origin);
- b) inspiration in folk (old town) tunes and shaping the arias or segment of arias in a similar way (Zrinjski: “Gdje na tvrdu Stancu-brdu“; melodic and rhythmic themes in Mislav and melodies in Ban Leget);
- c) using the preexisting folk tunes in a slightly modified way and exquisite stylization (in comparison with the piece as a whole, in fact he did the instrumentation), he inserted them in the operas (the arhaic “Cvate ruža rumena“ from Zrinjski);
- d) citing the tunes (also using suitable harmony and orchestration), styling them using refined artistic interpretation (the chorus of fairies “Ljubio je goluban“).

While striving to define the features of the trilogy's operas (notably their perception and reception, especially in the times of their inception), this work aimed to evaluate Zajc’s means and extent of creating the Croatian national operatic repertory, based on the fact that he was the most competent musician educated with the influence of Verdi school and possessing a practical experience of an operetta master. Having said that, this dissertation attempted to discuss the correlation between international and national idioms. The aforementioned idiom reflected on the context of creation of national operas and/or those which played a similar part in the conscious of the cultural public of the time. Regarding the context of the time, the intention of such creation in a practical sense could only be achieved by the following compositional tools: associative use of the harmonic models (the choice of keys), selection from a motivic palette in order to underline the national feelings, and, lastly, composer's skillfulness – a weighted compilation, a touch of mannerism, all in the service of accomplishing results. The conclusion brings the cognition of the means and level of Zajc's realization of national operatic opus, in which the following is reflected: composer's compositional craft, his past international experience and his newer influences, contained in the demands / expectations and possibilities of Croatian environment, which speaks about the meaning of Zajc's trilogy as such.

Moreover, certain features have been noted – innovative endeavour in the form and melodic-rhythmic creation in regard to composer's experience up to that point. The thesis that Zajc, against numerous odds, managed to play a key role in producing the first real Croatian national operatic canon in the second part of the 19th century (in the formative years of Croatian opera), thus inventing relevant features of a national idiom, was confirmed. These examples emphasize the importance of the social context and the role of a musical work (and the “musical life” of the environment that produced it and the environment where it belongs) – this role is most importantly a social one, which is, from a contemporary point of view on the history of music, especially actualized. With the sociological function, their appearance brought a political connotation – it was implied by the (social) political situation. Zajc's role on the path of inception and creation of the national operatic repertoire was also in exceeding all the possible obstacles. Despite the fact that Zajc's operas had in common with other heroic (national) operas, they did not seek to depict a random place, period or people; moreover, they were explicitly connected with Croatia, whether it is on behalf of toponymy and personal names or the historical foundation of the plot. As such, the operas are a reflection of a centuries-long tradition of musical creation, because they were conceived by the hand of a composer which was a regular paradigmatic example of an emissary bearing rich experiences and knowledge of European musical thought. The trilogy, based on the junction of Italian, Croatian and Austrian-German cultural influences, can be estimated as culturally complex, as it resonates the influences arisen from the composer's threefold being. The conclusion of this work is an attempt to summarize Zajc's importance as a composer of the national operatic opus, but at the same time also a call for further scholar work on Zajc's opus in the forthcoming discussions and studies.
